Green Tea

Bancha Hojicha Japan

Bancha is a classic Japanese large-leaf green tea made from the lower shoots of the tea plant. It contains substantially less caffeine than Sencha teas which are made from young shoots. Bancha Hojicha is made by roasting the Bancha leaves at high temperatures until they turn reddish-brown. Filled with aromatic flavours with roasted and nutty notes, this tea can be enjoyed with a slice of lemon or orange.

Bi Luo Chun Taiwan **

Translated as 'Green Spiral Leaves of Spring', once infused, this tea boasts an outstanding distinctive moist crisp fruity aroma. Peach, apricot and plum trees are planted among the tea bushes, so when these fruit trees bloom, the tender sprouts and buds of the tea absorb the different aromas, resulting in a lingering sweet aftertaste.

R 510 /100g

Four Seasons Spring Taiwan *

Four Seasons Spring is a great representation of a light fermented tea of about 15% fermentation level. Crispy and sweet with hints of peach and grass feelings, fragrance and flavours are at their full potential. Tea leaves are rolled to tight spherical shaped balls, encouraging multiple infusions for each special occasion. Lively and with a sense of rightness to start the day, the thrust of vitality of Spring lays within every cup.

R 270 /100g

Genmaicha Japan

Genmaicha means 'Natural Rice Tea'. Japanese Sencha tea is blended with roasted popped rice giving it a pleasant nutty flavour, and although it can be enjoyed at any time of the day, the Japanese prefer to drink this tea in the afternoon because it has low caffeine and a mild flavour along with a warm feeling.

R 200 /100g

Gunpowder Temple of Heaven China

Gunpowder tea is dried slowly in rotating drums into a very tightly-rolled ball. A well noticeable, rich, nutty green tea with an oaky aroma, it has a slightly dry and fresh flavour. For a classic North African-style taste, a steep with a handful of fresh mint is suggested.

Gyokuro Exclusive Japan ***

A top-class Japanese Sencha tea also known as the 'Dew of Pearl' or 'Most Exquisite Dew Drop', Gyokuro tea plants are grown in the shadow of broad-leaved trees and shaded with bamboo mats for two weeks before being plucked to boost the chlorophyll content and the green character of the tea. It has a high caffeine content and low tannin and the infusion is mild and typically tangy.

Kenya Purple Tea Kenya **

Purple tea, like all other tea originates from the Camellia Sinensis plant. The story was told, that the tea seedlings were gifted by the Indian tea growers back in the early 1900's. Purple tea is mainly marketed by Kenya-based tea growers. It's grown at elevations between 1,200 and 2,300 metres above sea level. This high altitude near the equator results in higher levels of UV exposure, and causes the plants to produce very high levels of anti-oxidants to protect the leaves from UV damage. The purple appearance of the tea is caused by an unique genetic mutation that produces anthocyanin, the same powerful anti-oxidant found in blueberries and other blue-appearance vegetables. Anthocyanin has many medicinal properties and is particularly known to be beneficial against cardiovascular diseases. These antioxidants are known to provide anti-cancer benefits, improve vision, and aid in cholesterol, blood sugar metabolism and body mass reduction. At the same time, caffeine content is lower than that of black or green tea. Although it is named purple, due to the low oxidation level and limited withering, roasting and drying processes, it is categorised within green tea, hence temperature for this tea should be around 75-80 degrees Celsius. Grassy and nutty notes, with a delightful light purple radiance..

R 520 /100g

Longjing China **

This well-known fine green tea is also called 'Dragon Well'. Known for its unique distinct shape with flattened leaves, fine white hair and smooth appearance, this tea manifests nutty, sweet, buttery and creamy sensations just before its fresh and tender aftertastes come forward.

R 560 /100g

Matcha Powder Japan **

Top buds are hand plucked to dry and then stone-ground to reveal the ultra-greenness of the tea. Stone grinding is an art much like making ceramic. This high-grade Matcha has intense sweetness with deep colour and flavour. Incorporating matcha powder in baking is one of the most natural ways of food colouring.

R 510 /100g

Sencha Fukujyu Japan

A middle-grade Sencha from Shizuoka on the slopes of Mount Fuji, Sencha means "steamed tea" because the tea is lightly steamed before being rolled and dried to preserve the freshness and the green character of the tea leaf. It has a distinctive, strong, green tea character special to green tea lovers.

Oolong

Ali High Mountain Green Oolong Taiwan **

Ali Mountain is famous for its superior High Mountain tea cultivation in Taiwan. Its abilities to gradually unlock aroma and flavours makes it ideal for multiple infusions each offering a different energy, taste, feeling, story and experience every time. The perfect example of the four elements and seasons, where you go or how long you go for on your exciting tea adventure is always unpredictable with this tea. Maximum of two leaves and one bud are hand plucked and dried with delicacy to reveal a mosaic of floral, woody and sweet aroma and flavours, changing with every infusion. Fragrance and drinking cups are used to appreciate this unique tea.

R 600 /100g

Ali High Mountain Ruby Oolong Taiwan **

Ali Mountain is well-known for its amazing energy and stories connected to oolong tea making at low to medium level of oxidisation, making it grassy and refreshing. This time, the oxidisation went a little step further to bordering that of black tea, exceeding the oxidation level of Oriental Beauty. Big leaf style tea leaves are plucked, then exposed under the sun, before proceeding to oxidisation chambers at low temperature for about 48-72hrs to achieve high overall oxidisation. Final product is a cup filled with black tea flavours, yet retaining multi-facet characteristics of an Oolong. This tea has a bright deep amber liquor, filled with rich fruit fragrance, and finished with an aftertaste of honey, excellent for vintage.

R 600 /100g

Da Yu Ling Taiwan ***

Da Yu Ling has a wonderful fragrance and taste. It is a lightly oxidised oolong tea with a refreshing palate that is sought after by the most demanding tea connoisseurs. Da Yu Ling is produced in limited quantities and is one of the most prized teas of Taiwan. Da Yu Ling oolong tea is a premium-grade oolong tea from the Da Yu Ling area of Taiwan's Taichung county, Mount Li area (Li Shan or Pear Mountain). Its high altitude (more than 2600 meters) makes this one of the highest tea plantations in the world. High altitude plantation of Da Yu Ling means that tea leaves grow slower and hence translate and develop its rich flavours slower into our mouths. To fully appreciate this fine oolong tea, brew it in the gong fu style.

Osmanthus Taiwan *

Oolong has a wide range of fermentation between 25% and 70%. This Oolong manifests a fermentation of around 40%. This Taiwanese Oolong is based on the traditional specialty of the province of Gangxi in the south of China. Small-leafed Oolong tea leaves are mixed with fresh Osmanthus blossoms from Northern Taiwan's perfect climate and landscape. Harvested early in the morning between 4 and 7am to reflect the best aromatic qualities for the scenting process before dried together with Oolong. Well-known for its relaxation and digestive properties, this yellow infusion has a mild, fruity flavour reminiscent of caramel. Osmanthus blossoms are amongst the three most celebrated blossoms in the East, alongside Jasmine and Chrysanthemum flowers. Due to the semi-fermented category of this fine oolong, it can last as much as 5 consecutive infusions, with the first few infusions representing grassy green tea followed by the last few infusions representing woody black tea... All while embraced in elegant blooming fragrance.

Pomelo Flower Oolong Organic Taiwan **

Pomelo flower tea is a cultural tea offering by the indigenous Hakka tribe in Taiwan. This method of tea making is truly special, and has been perfected through time. During the month of March every year, the pomelo season arrive where the pomelo flowers blossom to their fullest. Blossoms are harvested before noon to avoid any excess moistures like dew, before being packed with tea leaves at 1:1 ratio in a approximately 75oC environment for complete scenting process to commence. Traditionally, pomelo teas are tea leaves packed inside a fresh hollowed pomelo trunks followed by 9 cycles of heating with steam and hot air, making it a very incredible hard-pressed tea, which can be aged for years. Pomelo flower tea together with chrysanthemum, jasmine and osmanthus, form four of the most influential flowers in the scented flower tea category. What makes pomelo flower tea a little different, is that each flower stamen, pistil and ovary is removed by hand first before scenting, leaving only petals, resulting in a cup with refreshing rich body sweet and floral liquor of elegance.

Oriental Beauty Black Organic Taiwan

The term "Oriental Beauty" was initially given to a special Oolong grown and produced on the Western side of Taiwan, by Queen Elizabeth II, for its unique highly oxidised processing method resulting in a sweet, almost caramel and rich flavourful palate and unique aftertaste. This Oriental Beauty black tea is cultivated in Hualian, on the Eastern side of Taiwan (facing the Pacific Ocean, with high wind and moisture), to a high level of oxidisation like the Oriental Beauty Oolong. Similar to Oriental Beauty Oolong, this tea is frequent by tea jassid or at times called tea green leafhopper (3-7mm in length), where the jassids will eat the young shoots for the nutrient solution within, causing the leaves to naturally curl. This phenomena essentially triggers the oxidisation of tea leaves while the tea leaves are still intact. Thank to this natural special chemical reaction, the resulting tea is surprisingly sweet like subtle honey fragrance with beautiful long lingering sensations like no other.
