

Welcome to NIGIRO TEACAFE

Beverage experiences can be understood and separated into Yin and Yang, much like in life. Tea and coffee can be considered as yin and yang sides of Nigiro Teacafe, respectively. We all go through coffee and tea moments in different exciting ways at different times of our life.

Explore our 350 Nigiro teas: Green Teas, White Teas, Artistic Show Flower Teas, Oolong, Black Teas, Pu-erh, Fruit and Herbal Infusions as well as our unique South African Buchu, Honeybush and Rooibos... Furthermore, over 30 curated signature tea blends to align with unique hotels and restaurants' personalities...

The Spirit of Nigiro is an ever-wandering one, focusing on going against the flow in the pursuit of one's origin. Nigiro Tea connects people from the best of worlds, building on tea affinity that deepens bonds with every sip.

The quality of our tea lies in its making. As the tea leaves unfurl, they start to dance - unlocking to manifest natural, beautiful notes that resonate with the soul. Simple movements in tea alone can foster everlasting appreciation.

Tea, a platform for people to connect, connects us with ourselves, with others and with the depths of the tea master's tradition. When tea is mixed with the correct energy, correct temperature, appropriate infusion time and the right state of mind, all of its wonders and glories are unleashed.

Yours in Tea Appreciation

GREEN TEA

Bancha Hojicha Japan

Bancha is a classic Japanese large-leaf green tea made from the lower shoots of the tea plant. It contains substantially less caffeine than Sencha teas which are made from young shoots. Bancha Hojicha is made by roasting the Bancha leaves at high temperatures until they turn reddish-brown. Filled with aromatic flavours with roasted and nutty notes, this tea can be enjoyed with a slice of lemon or orange.

Bi Luo Chun Taiwan**

Translated as 'Green Spiral Leaves of Spring', once infused, this tea boasts an outstanding distinctive moist crisp fruity aroma. Peach, apricot and plum trees are planted among the tea bushes, so when these fruit trees bloom, the tender sprouts and buds of the tea absorb the different aromas, resulting in a lingering sweet aftertaste.

R 550 /100g

Four Seasons Spring Taiwan

Four Seasons Spring is a great representation of a light fermented tea of about 15% fermentation level. Crispy and sweet with hints of peach and grassy flavours. Tea leaves are rolled to tight spherical shaped balls, encouraging multiple infusions for each special occasion. Fresh and sweet, the vitality of Spring is presented within every cup.

R 290 /100g

Genmaicha Japan

Genmaicha means 'Natural Rice Tea'. Japanese Sencha tea is blended with roasted popped rice giving it a pleasant nutty flavour, and although it can be enjoyed at any time of the day, the Japanese prefer to drink this tea in the afternoon because it has low caffeine and a mild flavour along with feelings of warmth.

R 210 /100g

Gunpowder Temple of Heaven China

Gunpowder tea is dried slowly in rotating drums into very tightly rolled balls. A well noticeable, rich, nutty green tea with an oaky aroma, it has a slightly dry and fresh flavour. For a classic North African flavour, a steep with a handful of fresh mint is suggested.

Gyokuro Exclusive Japan***

A first-class Japanese Sencha tea also known as the 'Dew of Pearl' or 'Most Exquisite Dew Drop'. Gyokuro tea plants are grown in the shadow of broad-leaved trees and shaded with bamboo mats for two weeks before being plucked to boost the chlorophyll content and the green character of the tea. It has a high caffeine content as well as low tannin and the infusion is mild and typically tangy.

Kenya Purple Tea Kenya*

Purple tea, like all other teas, originates from the Camellia Sinensis plant. The story told was, tea seedlings were gifted by the Indian tea farmers in the early 1900's and is now mainly marketed by Kenyan tea farmers. Grown at elevations between 1,200 and 2,300 metres above sea level, this high altitude near the equator results in higher levels of UV exposure. To protect the leaves from UV damage, the plants increase production of antioxidants found also in blueberries and other blue-coloured vegetables through a genetic mutation that produces anthocyanin, resulting in its purple exterior. These antioxidants have many medicinal properties and are mostly known to help aid cardiovascular diseases, cancer, vision, cholesterol, blood sugar, metabolism and mass reduction. Although its caffeine content is lower than black and green tea, due to the low oxidation level, limited withering, roasting, and drying processes, it is thus categorised as green tea, meaning infusion temperatures should be around 75-80 degrees Celsius to uncover the delightful light purple radiance and nutty notes.

Longjing Taiwan**

This popular fine green tea is also called 'Dragon Well'. Known for its unique distinct shape with flattened leaves, fine white hair and smooth form, this tea brings about a nutty, sweet, buttery and creamy sensation just before a fresh and tender aftertaste.

Matcha Powder Japan**

Top buds are hand plucked to dry and then undergo the art of stone-grinding to reveal the ultra-greenness of the tea. This high-grade Matcha has an intense sweetness with a deep colour complimenting its beautiful flavour. Matcha powder can be used as a natural food colouring with many incorporating it in baking.

R 510 /100g

Sencha Fukujyu Japan

A middle-grade Sencha from the slopes of Mount Fuji (Shizuoka), Sencha means "steamed tea" because the tea is lightly steamed before being rolled and dried to preserve the freshness and green character of the tea leaf. It has a distinct and strong tea character special to green tea lovers.

WHITE TEA

Bai Mu Dan Organic Taiwan***

This special varietal named Taiwan #23, is grown in the Bamboo Mountain district in the centre of the island of Taiwan. With small leaves along with natural fruit and floral fragrances, Taiwan#23 is a varietal with high vitality in its growth and can adapt to the hot and dry slopes in its harvesting region. This tea has a signature tight astringency, meaning it releases its strength and richness gradually, resulting in a bright light orange in colour.

Bai Mu Dan China

A white tea named after 'White Peony Flower' produced in China's Fujian province. The terminal bud and two leaves are plucked only in the season of spring before being dried in the sun or in closed rooms. This results in an infusion which is a delicate light orange, presenting a pleasant subtle flavour, a reflection of the beauty of Spring.

R 290 /100g

OOLONG

Ali High Mountain Green Oolong Taiwan**

Ali Mountain is famous for its superior High Mountain tea cultivation in Taiwan. Its abilities to gradually unlock aroma and flavours which makes it ideal for multiple infusions, each infusion offering a different energy, taste, feeling, and story. The perfect formulation of the four elements and seasons, bringing about surprise and joy with each sip. A maximum of two leaves and one bud are hand plucked and dried with delicacy to reveal a woody and sweet aroma and flavour. Fragrance and drinking cups are used to further appreciate this unique tea.

Ali High Mountain Ruby Oolong Taiwan***

Ali Mountain is well known for its amazing energy and stories connected to oolong tea-making, a process of low to medium level oxidation, creating grassy and refreshing aromas, but with this tea, oxidation is taken a step further almost matching the oxidation level of black teas. Big tea leaves are plucked and dried in the sun, before taken to oxidation chambers at low temperatures for about 48-72hrs to achieve high overall oxidation, which means the final product is a cup filled with hints of black tea, yet retaining a multifaceted characteristic of Oolong. This tea has a bright deep amber liquor, filled with rich fruit fragrance, and an aftertaste of caramel honey.

Da Yu Ling Taiwan***

Da Yu Ling has a wonderful fragrance and taste. It is a lightly oxidised oolong tea with a refreshing palate that is sought after by the most demanding tea connoisseurs. Da Yu Ling is produced in limited quantities and is one of the most prized teas in Taiwan. Da Yu Ling oolong tea is a premium-grade oolong tea from the Da Yu Ling area of Taiwan's Taichung county, Mount Li area (Li Shan or Pear Mountain). Its high altitude (more than 2600 meters) makes this one of the highest tea plantations in the world. High altitude means growth is slower and hence develops rich flavours. To fully appreciate this fine oolong tea, brew it in the gong fu style.

Red Jade Taiwan**

Well known as 'Red' or 'Red Jade', this is the one of the highest fermented Oolongs produced in Fulu Tea District, Taitung County Taiwan. The fermentation level is known to be as high as 80-90%, hence it is also known as the black tea of oolong. Correctly termed, its unique production method of stirring tea leaves over heat, (key step of Oolong production) and undergoing full black tea fermentation. This highly oxidised tea is rich in brown colour like a black tea, yet manifests a rounded sweet Oolong aroma. For those interested in the tea history, Asia's "Red" tea is translated to "Black" tea in the West, interesting things happen in history...

R 660 /100g

Te Guan Yin Taiwan**

'Te Guan Yin', also known as 'Iron Goddess of Mercy', is traditionally grown in Fujian Province and produced from a specific type of tea bush. ## Osmanthus Oolong*

Oolong has a wide range of fermentation between 25% and 70%. This Oolong manifests a fermentation of around 40%. This Taiwanese Oolong is based on the traditional specialty of the province of Gangxi in the south of China. Small-leafed Oolong tea leaves are mixed with fresh Osmanthus blossoms from Northern Taiwan region. Harvested early in the morning between 4 and 7am to result in the best aromatic qualities for the scenting process before dried together with Oolong. Well-known for its relaxation and digestive properties, this yellow infusion has a mild flavour reminiscent of caramel. Osmanthus blossoms are amongst the three most celebrated blossoms in the East, alongside Jasmine and Chrysanthemum flowers. Due to the semi-fermented category of this fine Oolong, it can last as much as 5 consecutive infusions, with the first few infusions representing grassy green tea followed by the last few infusions representing woody black tea.

Peach Jasmine Oolong*

When sweet blooming jasmine is paired with peach, tea connection is rapidly raised to a whole different level. Resonance of fruity and floral notes is aimed to extend the sentimental experience. This angelic tea releases memories reflecting fluffy clouds and blossoming petals.

Pomelo Flower Organic Oolong ***

Pomelo flower tea is a cultural tea offering by the indigenous Hakka tribe in Taiwan. This method of tea-making is truly special and has been perfected over time. During the month of March every year, the pomelo season arrives. Blossoms are harvested before noon to avoid any excess moisture like dew, before being packed with tea leaves at 1:1 ratio in an approximately 75°C environment, before a scenting process commences. Traditionally, pomelo teas are tea leaves packed inside a fresh hollowed pomelo trunks followed by 9 cycles of heating with steam and hot air, making it an incredibly hard-pressed tea, which can be aged for years. Pomelo flower tea, along with chrysanthemum, jasmine and osmanthus, form four of the most influential flowers in the scented flower tea category. What makes pomelo flower tea a little different, is that each flower stamen, pistil and ovary is removed by hand first before used for scenting, leaving only petals, which results in a cup of refreshing richness, a sweet and floral liquor of elegance.

Oriental Beauty Black Organic Taiwan***

The term "Oriental Beauty" was initially given to a special Oolong grown and produced on the Western side of Taiwan, by Queen Elizabeth II, for its unique highly oxidised processing method. This Oriental Beauty black tea is cultivated in Hualian on the Eastern side of Taiwan which faces the Pacific Ocean and its high winds and moisture. Like Oriental Beauty Oolong, these tea leaves are popular among the tea Jassid or at times called Green Tea Leafhoppers (3-7mm in length), where the insects will eat the nutrient rich young shoots causing the leaves to naturally curl. This phenomenon essentially triggers the oxidisation of tea leaves even before picking, resulting in a surprisingly sweet-like-honey lingering sensation.

DARK TEA

Pu-Erh is grown in the Chinese province Yunnan, experiencing fermentation after being processed, then cellared and re-fermented under humid conditions, for several years. Famous in Asia for its medicinal properties, top quality Pu-Erh teas are sold at auctions at sky-high prices.

Pu-Erh Royal 2007**

This Pu-Erh is grown in the Chinese province of Yunnan. Young leaves and buds from old trees are hand harvested and carefully selected in early months of the year between February and March in order to capture the most tender part of Pu-Erh. The appearance is unique and distinct with golden yellow aged buds as a result of the traditional fermentation process in humid conditions. In the history of Pu-Erh, all Royal Pu-Erhs were used as offering for Chinese Royals for hundreds of years, and sometimes used for diplomatic gifting, they are sometimes referred to as the 'Treasure Pu-Erh' or 'Tribute Tea'. This vintage cup is a deep red with a distinctive, earthy taste and an energy that reflects ancient wisdom and countless stories.

Chrysanthemum Pu-Erh**

Pu-Erh is formally known and grown in the Chinese province of Yunnan, it is well-known in Asia for its medicinal properties. Undergoing a unique process, the leaves are pressed and experience an unusually long fermentation period before being cellared and re-fermented under humid conditions, sometimes for several years. Top quality Pu-Erh teas are sold at auction for high prices, and when paired with famous yellow and red chrysanthemum flowers, perfection is discovered through the worlds of earthiness and sweet floral scents, making this a lovely infusion for a tired or sick body on cold days.

Yerba Mate Green

Mate is made from the green leaves of a tree which resemble the Holy. Originally from Paraguay situated in between Brazil and Argentina, it was consumed by the local native people and later became the drink of the Gauchos, the South American cowboys. Typically served in a calabash with a silver straw called a bombilla, Mate's stimulating effects last longer than that of coffee, and short infusions are more stimulating than longer ones. Mate is rich in tannin and vitamin C, can be enjoyed hot or cold, with or without milk, and the addition of fruits, orange peels or herbs like peppermint and lemongrass will help accentuate its light caramel flavour.

Yerba Mate Roasted

Formerly the Green Mate, the process of roasting leads to the Roasted Mate having a delicious, light-caramel flavour especially if blended with other herbs like peppermint and lemongrass. The sweetness and roast smell resemble freshly ground coffee.
